At Metropolitan.

Mme. Olive Fremstad, the soprano, whose three year contract at the Metropolitan is about to expire, said yesterday that she has not completed arrangements for a concert tour, but would consider any proposition that Mr. Gatti-Casazza might suggest that would permit her to appear on the concert platform and at the Metropolitan. She said that no overtures have been made for a renewal of her contract, and if her services are not retained she will take up concert work, possibly singing in opera at times abroad.

Mme. Fremstad said that although she liked Mr. Gatti-Casazza, she could not say that he has always been merciful to her. Once she was obliged, she said, to sing Elizabeth in "Tannhaeuser" on the night following her return from Lakewood with a sore throat.

Mme. Fremstad declared that she never heard that artists were expected to ask managers for renewals of contracts. William Guard, press representative of the
